Answers to Questions

1. Could you be more specific on “transit oriented development” on page 19, Scope of Services. We’re trying to determine what that means to find the best team member.
 - A. According to the Federal Transit Administration, transit-oriented development, is “a mix of commercial, residential, office and entertainment centered around or located near a transit station”. Additionally, a successful transit-oriented development “depends on access and density around the transit station. Convenient access to transit fosters development, while density encourages people to use the transit system.” Additional information about this type of development is found here: Transit-Oriented Development | FTA \(dot.gov\)
